Yes, everybody's seen this already.

Everybody except Daphne, I'd guess.

You know, there sure are a lot of white people in Europe.

I like that it's gender-blind, though.

...Mrrp?

I call false advertising. European films are not all about sex.

(Sadly. Though many of them could do with more explosions, too.)

ponders pointing this out to an advertising authority

I wandered over from Chas' journal as well. FWIW, I lived in Europe for 4 years, it's not as white as all that. There is a very large middle eastern population, and in Belgium the immigrant Turks are regarded in about the same light as immigrant Mexicans are here. There are also more Asians than one would think, mostly Chinese and Vietnamese from my experience. Africans tended to be of true African decent and sport British accents, and were more rare than in the US, but not so much as to get strange looks. Sadly, some of the more moronic racism from the US has translated over there as well.

On a more positive note, I enjoyed European films and television (you may as well, several big budget movies released here in the States are produced by Kanal, a European production company. An interesting tidbit: in most countries over there, what the US would consider "softcore porn" is allowed after around 9pm. However, violent movies are almost never shown, and I recall in a popular music video a scene with firearms that the handguns were blurred out. I thought it made more sense than what he do here. How is blowing someones head off with an Uzi ok, and a couple in love having sex not?

BTW, your sandwich is safe from me. Not enough mustard.

That was actually an ironic comment on the homogenous nature of the melanin-deprived in the ad I linked. ;-)

Ah, irony. Oops.

I fail at irony.
